

Manitoba tightens pharmacare reimbursements

Manitoba has tightened its regulations on Pharmacare reimbursement for prescription medicines. The drug-insurance program now reimburses up to a maximum of only 100 days' supply of a drug in a 90-day period; the balance of any quantity in excess of that limit is now the responsibility of the patient. The step was taken to stop "the growing practice of prescriptions being filled for excessive periods ranging from 365 days to as much as 2 or 3 years," Health Minister Jim McCrae said.

Anesthetists given something to chew on

A recent letter to the Canadian Journal of Anaesthesia warned physicians about the dangers posed when patients chew gum prior to surgery.

The letter recounted a procedure in which preoxygenation had commenced. Just before anesthetic induction with thiopentone, the 81-year-old female patient asked: "Is it time for me to take my chewing gum out?" A 2-cm wad of gum was removed, much to the surprise of the preoperative staff and anesthesiologists, who had noted nothing strange about her speech and witnessed no chewing. Had it not been removed, said the anesthesiologists, "a potentially fatal airway obstruction could have ensued." Patients are already advised to refrain from chewing gum before anesthesia because it might increase acid secretion and gastric volume, and cause obstruction.

Mental illness "at bottom too long"

Cuts in the number of psychiatric inpatient beds continue to compromise seriously the effective treatment of patients with acute and chronic mental illness, the past president of the Canadian Psychiatric Association (CPA) charges. Speaking at the CPA's recent annual meeting, Dr. Diane Watson said "care and treatment of persons with mental illness has been at the bottom of Canada's health care agenda for too long." The situation is made worse by a lack of leadership in addressing the stigma that surrounds mental illness, which affects 1 in 5 Canadians. Watson said there should be no further hospital cutbacks until appropriate alternative community services are in place.

Insulin too costly in some areas

"Memo" casts light on malaise affecting Ontario hospitals

Just how low can morale go at Ontario's hospitals? A fake "intradepartmental memorandum" that has been making the rounds at Ottawa hospitals provides some indication. Its subject is "new cost-cutting measures."

"Effective immediately, this hospital will no longer provide security," it begins. "Each charge nurse/technologist will be issued a .38-calibre revolver and 12 rounds of ammunition. Additional rounds will be stored in the pharmacy." It adds that in addition to their routine duties, nurses and technologists will take turns patrolling the hospital grounds and the ICU will take over responsibility for security surveillance because of its experience watching cardiac monitors.

There is bad news for patients as well, because food service will be discontinued. "Patients wishing to be fed should inform their family, or make arrangements with Subway, Domino's Pizza, etc. before meal times." Coin-operated phones in each patient's room will make this possible.

The memo goes on to tell physicians that they can order no more than two x-rays per patient per stay. "This is due to the turn-around time required by the photo labs. Two prints will be provided for the price of one, and physicians are being advised to clip coupons from the Sunday paper if they want extra sets."

Administrators are now responsible for groundskeeping duties. "If an administrator cannot be reached by calling his/her office," says the memo, "it is suggested that you go outside and listen for the sound of a lawn mower, Weed Whacker or snow blower."

The hospital is also starting a recycling program to collect unused fruit and bread. "The resulting mouldy compost will be utilized by the pharmacy for nosocomial production of antibiotics. These will also be available for purchase through the hospital pharmacy and will, coincidentally, soon be the only antibiotics listed on the Ministry of Health formulary."

The black humour is a sign of the malaise affecting Ontario's hospitals because of a rash of funding cutbacks and closures. In Ottawa, workers currently are waiting for the axe to fall on one or more of the city's acute-care hospitals.
