Died of malignant melanoma, June 4, 2004, aged 68; survived by his wife, Clare, four sons and their wives, and six grandchildren. Recipient, Queen's Silver Jubilee Medal, 1977; Family Physician of the Year, 1986 (Alberta Chapter of the College of Family Physicians of Canada [CFPC]). As a key member of the first truly national research committee of the CFPC, he conceived and was instrumental in founding the National Library of Family Medicine, located at the University of Western Ontario. He was the first chairman of the International Classification Committee of the World Organization of Family/General Practitioners, which produced the International Classification of Health Problems in Primary Care, accepted as the worldwide standard. He was a great communicator with letters of encouragement to colleagues, in his publications and speaking at conferences. His unique perspective and sense of humour showed in his ideas for research, (e.g., an Index of Seriousness) and in award-winning publications (e.g., The Electric Speaking Practice). Other major interests included genealogy and bookbinding.
