I read CMAJ enthusiastically, although now I am mostly retired. Ursus' column,1 however, was a longstanding contradiction. It was related to The Left Atrium, in a way, but yet was different. Although I would hurriedly open each issue of CMAJ when it arrived and read Ursus' column avidly, often I would put it down after I had consumed it and muse, "Whatever was ...?" Then I would turn to the Deaths page for reassurance that neither my friends nor I were listed. Finally, I would relax into the scientific papers or clinical studies and often the lead editorial, but the slight anxiety engendered by Ursus would linger.

I am not sure when I first read his column. I am not even sure what I know about him, although the personal revelations were surprisingly detailed. Will he be calm, now that he cannot lay each month's trials off on us? How did his colleagues feel about his exposé of their relations again and again? Surely they must have muttered, "Oh, that's just Ursus!"

Perhaps we might have become less involved with his life had he continued to pursue his youthful passion for communicating in verse, or perhaps we might have become more enchanted. Oh gracious, just let him know that we shall miss him. For his own peace of mind, he must continue to write, as I am sure he will.

Brian Little MD

Clinical Professor of Obstetrics and Gynecology and Women's Health New Jersey Medical School Newark, NJ Competing interests: None declared.

REFERENCE

1. Query. CMAJ 2007;176(13):1920.

DOI:10.1503/cmaj.1070091

I must pass on how much I enjoyed Query. Truth be told I read CMAJ from back to front! Thanks for the smiles.

Karen Tipler MD

Urgent care physician San Diego, Calif.

Competing interests: None declared.

REFERENCE

I. Query. CMAJ 2007;176:1920.

DOI:10.1503/cmaj.1070094

Correction

A footnote, which mentions that extrapulmonary sequestrations have their own pleural covering, was inadvertently omitted from Table 1 in a Practice article¹ in the May 22 issue of the journal. We apologize for this omission.

REFERENCE

 AbouzzEdine O, Tangri N. Abdominal crunches as an unusual cause of empyema. CMAJ 2007;176(11): 1577-8.

DOI:10.1503/cmaj.071235

Letters submission process

CMAJ's enhanced letters feature is now the portal for all submissions to our letters column. To prepare a letter, visit www.cmaj.ca and click "Submit a response to this article" in the box near the top right-hand corner of any CMAJ article. All letters will be considered for publication in the print journal.

Letters written in response to an article published in CMAJ are more likely to be accepted for print publication if they are submitted within 2 months of the article's publication date. Letters accepted for print publication are edited for length (usually 250 words) and house style.

Do you understand the fine print in your office lease?

We do.

Our medical lease experts can:

Save you time and money

Provide leasing advice specific to medical offices

Make recommendations on critical and costly issues

Negotiate terms with your landlord on your behalf

Complete assessments and market searches for new office space

cma.ca/CMAJ2 | 1 800 361-9151 practice.solutions@cma.ca

Services provided by Practice Solutions Tenant Lease Services Inc., an Ontario registered real estate brokerage with affiliated licensed brokers across Canada.